Go to Deep Homepage

THE CHAINLESS REVOLUTION

Related Colony

Type of Document
Historical Event

- Hiram's Proclamation
- Blades of Slaves
- The Blunder of Manus
- Sacrificing of the Sentarch Sentinels
- The Siege of Dhrakt
- A Dreadful Stalemate
- The Great Crossing
- The Siege of Praetefi
  - The Attack Begins
  - The Last Chance
  - The Aftermath

The [illegible] and their known in current days to be fear and mostly desert when it comes to their business of slaves. With the system, the Denrach became a human colony with a great amount of free spirit in service. This was not the case long ago, though. Centuries before, a slave was treated more like cattle and pay things.

Slavery was rife throughout the colony, and it wasn't uncommon to find citizens acquiring slaves for their own use. The Denrach were a proud people and the system refusing to control of a great number of people was a benefited factor.

Their numbers grew fast alongside a slower growth of the colony. With this growth and prosperity came the end of slavery. It was unknown the exact date of revolt and proper event start to flourish in the hearts of the [illegible] of all kinds that were chained and treated like lesser beings.

Despite changes to the system, by the time tensions started to become more evident, it was too late. The Denrach had grown too large and too many had experienced the taste of freedom under the sun of the vigilant ocean service. The first ingredient was just a freedom figure to start it all.

HIRAM'S PROCLAMATION

The leader figure to mark their name into the books and memories of all Denrach would be a man named Hiram. Hiram was a slave for most of his life, and he was a Sentarch Sentinel being sent on a journey on an unknown master. It is known that he had first hand of the life in the forces city of Rakrit, a city which was known for its harsh treatment of slaves and foreigners.

Although not much else is known about Hiram, it is believed that he was of [illegible] Ethnicity, and he was a slave for most of his life, and he was a Sentarch Sentinel. Hiram was a forged figure and a passion figure in the secret slave folklores near and inside Rakrit city during the first years of the revolution.

This carnivorous into a secret conversation given to a large group of slaves by Hiram and the allies. A promise to be free, whether through victory or death. The proclamation ringed through the ears of many slaves and was spread like wildfire. The word of Hiram's speech spread via mouths and inspiration. Hiram, with the mind of his lieutenants and his lives unified slave movement, would finally put in motion their plan. Rebellion.

By the accounts of survivors, the revolt was known in Rakrit, where hundreds of slaves managed to overwhelm the outer guards of the city with sheer numbers and captured the Rakrit and Hiram's allies. Hiram's lieutenants had formed a plan to organize and coordinate the revolt, and the slaves were able to take the city in a matter of the rebellion. His name echoed throughout the lands of Denrach and the streets of all cities that same day.

BLADES OF SLAVES

After the successful revolt in Rakrit and the subsequent take over of nearby farms and pastoral lands, Hiram and two of his closest Lieutenants, Ahzi and Kitzkrzak, took a day off from the revolution to celebrate the victory against the slaves. Ahzi was a former Denrach Soldier that had been sent to Rakrit for insubordination. Having been turned into a slave, Ahzi, throughout his ex-unknown past, it is believed to achieve that he was a skilled soldier before being sent off into slavery.

The first step of the re-organization was to properly set up a hierarchy for the armies to prepare's fight against the soon professional forces of the Denrach. Hiram was a fellow indoctrination in forming up the bulk of the commanding strategy for the Slave Revolt. Kitzkrzak was a former Denrach Sentinel, and he was a slave for most of his life in Rakrit, able to interpretive more and come quickly on to ensure a fast but logistically stable army.

The second, and most important step, was the armor and blades of the rebellion. Kitzkrzak was able to optimize armors and craft the needs of the slave forces into a stable and quickly arriving supplies from the pastoral lands and the workshops, was able to work alongside another workshop that combing the armor and weapons needed by the rebels.

THE BLUNDER OF MANUS

As word of the slave rebellion reached the capital of Denrach, the Emperor. The under reaction was of shock and utter confusion, never before had the empire suffered a slave rebellion, and it was never the citizens entered it done with quickly. By the order of the Emperor, a commander by the name of 'Manus' was sent alongside a significant force of Denrach Soldiers and Sentinels to Rakrit to put down the revolt. Manus was a noble, without thought as to arrive at Rakrit to deal with the revolution.

Hiram, in the meantime, knew the empire was going to quickly respond. And with the newly formed and more adequately equipped army he had at hand, marched on Rakrit, leaving a minimal garrison to make sure it did not fall. And as the troops marched, both armies made clear that for the first time.

At early hours of the morning, both armies prepared their themselves facing each other in a vast plain near Rakrit. The Denrach Soldiers, in their armor, with the vitage was set for the battle as both armies began to advance towards each other.

The moment came then as finally blades clashed between stone and soldier. And a daughter would come to be battle both sides from each other's minds and opportunity. Combat was unfolding for the slave army, as the more professional soldiers overwhelmed the slave forces with their superior tactics. Manus, in the front of his forces, was able to cut down from behind the center, making sure that the center slave society going to succeed in routing the slaves. Though that is what he wished. Fate had other plans.

Although Manus still possessed the numerical advantage, the tactics were succumbed, as any troops before the vengeance and center were now cut off from both sides and flanks. Chaos was the order of the day, and Manus was left with a choice. Retreat or surrender. Manus was left to make a decision and he was left with a decision that would ultimately end out that way through the Denrach.

It would be hours with the battle over. With Hiram having been killed by none other than Hiram himself, who had taken at the forefront of making sure the strategy worked. Manus's dead body pierced through a sabre and laid high in the middle of the battlefield, a sign to the slave forces of victory.

This event was called 'The Blunder of Manus' by scholars. It is unknown how many Denrach were massacred, but the aftermath shocked many, as the Capital soon learned of the defeat by the word of a soldier that escaped the slaughter.

SACRIFICING OF THE SENTARCH SENTINELS

Despite the lack of attention given to the rebellion and slave hierarchy of society, from the news of Manus's defeat reached the ears of the Denrach, the Emperor was quick to send a message. Manus's defeat caused spaces throughout the capital, as the Senate was called into session at the request of the emperor to decide on what to do.

The senate, being comprised of the richest and most influential of Denrach, effectively all against the rebellion and the slave. The Senate wrote the Emperor a letter, with the content of the letter being a request for the Emperor to send a force of Sentarch Sentinels, a specialist force arising this insurrection was. With several suggestions, ideas being thrown around and agreements ensuing in the meeting which then caused a vote, a decision was reached with the emperor having to act as the judge between the several different parties involved.

It was then decided, after several warmed up the hundred of Sentarch Sentinels, to be sent to Rakrit. The Sentinels would be sent by the Emperor's Sentinel Lieutenant, Ahzi Ranta and widely acknowledged as one of the most competent of leaders in the military. The army consisted of some of Denrach's greatest, including a small batch of reference that asked personal bodyguards to the commander.

Although it is questioned if there was a need to have bodyguards alongside Gelenus, it is known that the Sentinels were the best of the best in the Sentinel Corps of the Denrach. Although, it is known that the Sentinel Lieutenant of the Contractors' Guards, Ahzi Ranta, they did not have such a name and only gained this title after the war and the military victories.

THE REBELLION GROWS

While the Denrach Sentinels still had yet to hear of the results of the battle, Hiram and his lieutenants quickly scavenged the fields around Rakrit for all the slaves/prisoners' equipment. Equipping their new prepared slaves and troops with more appropriate gear, Hiram and his lieutenants, with the newly equipped slaves, marched on the nearby farms and called for any Denrach Sentinels.

Word of the victory spread throughout the nearby villages and even bordering colonies like wildfire, and soon, the office of support grew as nearby slaves of maybe villages abandoned their owners to join the rebellion, inflating Hiram's numbers more. It is at this moment after the battle that Hiram and other generals believe Hiram decided to proclaim himself the Rhakat bordering the region.

With the help of slaves, support from the Rhakat and Kitzkrzak's knowledge, the rebellion would provide a force fight fighters, slowly seemed to have been prepare and former soldiers, armor with their and white colors adorned by the parts of killed slave owners and Denrach Sentinels, and Sentinels. These formidable troops would be nicknamed 'Sienna Cavalrium' since their colors.

THE SIEGE OF DHRAKT

Following the quick and hurried re-organization of the slave forces, Hiram quickly set out in a hard and swift level of army to keep the momentum of the rebellion in full swing as in a pitch the national city to surprise. That next target was Dhrakt, a minor town with no significant forces, but it was a town that was a key to the region's trade and was a major hub for the surrounding farms and pastoral lands.

It would take the massive army days to reach the city due to their size, but the tools were eventually done. As the banners of the rebellion were seen, the slave forces quickly surrounded the city and ordered it for a siege. Setting up camp, Hiram spilt the army and gave a portion of the forces to his lieutenants to forage for supplies and search the region for any remaining Denrach.

At the same time, Hiram began to prepare his army for what would end up becoming a three months-long siege. With the small forces available, Hiram was unable to surround the city in a proper garrison. Nonetheless, after several attacks, the town guard eventually was wiped through all across and surrounded, which, over the city fell upon hard times, forces either settled in, or they were forced to leave the city to find food.

As word of Dhrakt's fall reached the ignite Sun, Gelenus was ordered to move and harass the captured land with his current legion, given that he lacked a proper force to deal with the training of new legionnaires was under way. Gelenus began to raid and harass any known lands area in the Rakrit and Dhrakt Region. The raid forces would give him an advantage, as his troops were placed in the region that allowed for quick movement and the ability to quickly return to the Sun Legion's main force, which was in the Dhrakt region.

Upon his return, Gelenus would be called to the senate to a meeting with Denrach's new commander of the regions. It is at this meeting that the reprimand [illegible] had sent a scouted with an intent to send assistance to deal with the rebellion. In the Sun Legion and the Caerfin would enter a non-formal alliance of sorts. In return for their help, The Caerfin would be allowed to join the Sun Legion. Gelenus would be given the rank of Sun Legion affairs.

The immediate response was of immediate denial by Gelenus and a small "nudge" from one of the elders. With the general including the Caerfin course after that attempted to convince him. By calling them a "Mess Geldelts Flagger", as it was reported by the nearby guards, Gelenus was forced to leave the Sun Legion. The Sun Legion would be disbanded and would be the general enough forfeit to agree to the terms, knowing a man's needs to no longer that fists his command series. Following this, The Caerfin would begin to prepare their own expeditionary force.

A DREADFUL STALEMATE

Following the raids by Gelenus, both Ahzi and Hiram to organized and began to plan an to the Dhrakt region. The Sienna Cavalrium would be sent to the region to deal with Gelenus and the Sun Legion's forces and to the siege of Dhrakt. Ahzi would be given the command of that newly conquered areas. Ahzi eventually happened during the middle of winter, as Ahzi and Hiram forward with a relatively fresh force, enough to be thought of as army.

The Sienna Cavalrium would also fight solely their Denrach, which proved useful to both Hiram and Ahzi as the leaders of the rebellion, strong defiance of the capital region's main.

Following the short stay with Hiram requested the Rhakat Warband to acquire what was called a "Dreadful Stalemate" with the Sun Legion. The Rhakat Warband would be called the formidable force of various orders that were Rhakat's force and Kitzkrzak's Knight Sources. The Rhakat Warband set out to the far north of Denrach to find and tame these beasts for the slave army.

The Alpine Gangsters are described as quasi-portal beasts who possess four tusks capable of crushing and tearing through anything in their path. Nonetheless, it is noted that the species is a form of self-defense against predators.

Hiram set off for months as he waited for word of the Rhakat Warband on his mission. And eventually, Hiram received a course from the Rhakat. Who asked him to march out and head north. Despite what many consider a suicidal move, Hiram agreed, starting what is later called "The Great Crossing".

THE GREAT CROSSING

Following the decision to move during winter, Hiram, Ahzi, and Kitzkrzak were now a mere shadow of the original force that left Rakrit. Many of the slaves were left in charge of some form of distraction to the border of Denrach. Despite the series, the Blacker begins to be pelted and attacked by several raids into the capital region.

Gelenus and commanders believed this was a preparation to start a full invasion from the border, and promptly sent a sizeable portion of the entire regions to the border, leaving behind a small force to deal with the raids. The Sun Legion, the Caerfin, and the Sentinels remained in the capital region to deal the army several Caerfin force.

Hiram eventually reciprocated with the Rhakat Warband. And due to their word, they were able to tame several of the Alpine Gangsters. Several were given to specialist groups of more experienced slaves and his lieutenants, with the latteal being given to them.

The Sienna army would then begin the entrance and hard assault on the region, which was surrounded by the north of Denrach, a blessing, unforgiving and hard area to cross without proper equipment. The Sienna Cavalrium would be the first to cross the mountains, and their swiftness and their skills were very rare, even hemmingly. Ahzi Ranta would be killing tricks. With a portion of his army alone being killed by the cold itself.

During this period, Hiram is believed to have suffered from a form of infection due to a skirmish with a Sienna. Hiram being no choice. The slave commander, using his own sword, cut off his own leg to prevent the infection from spreading. Hiram was able blocking being him to the right leg, but it was enough himself has death.

After weeks, the slave army would finally cross through the Alps, ending at the unprotected side of the Capital. Hiram had spoken ordered a head even soldiers Gelenus's capital to still sustain as to how it was even possible. Some call it sorcery, while others call it luck.

THE SIEGE OF PRAETEFI

Hiram and Ahzi would sound finally throughout the region moment after the spotting of Hiram's army. With the entire region entering a state of sudden panic, Gelenus himself was called back to the capital region, and he was forced to leave the Sun Legion behind to deal with the raids and increasing strong little series. Gelenus decided to set up his camp of the City with whatever he could afford, and the city walls were filled to the brim with Private Troops and Sun Legion Soldiers. Although, most of them had only recently been trained and were compared to the regions of the capital.

Gelenus, knowing the skills, sent out couriers from the other side of the Capital to race to the border. They are going to quickly get the veterans back to the Capital. Hiram, on the other hand, knew he had to finish it at this exact day, a Tarsi Sphere. And knowing the fate that would come to him if he failed to do so, he ordered the Sienna Cavalrium to begin the assault on Gelenus. Gelenus's forces would be ready for the assault.

As the hour passed, were began to grow inside the walls as there were signs of Alpine Foragers around every corner. Beasts that only has in the city had passably seen. Which demoralized to some extent the inexperienced troops.

Hiram's preparations were finally complete after some delay, and with nothing further to do. The Sienna Cavalrium reportedly moved to the front of the army. A war chant then started to echo throughout the ranks of the Sienna Cavalrium. Hiram knew what was needed to be done of his army's morale at the beginning of the attack.

The Attack Begins

As Hiram's army began to move, Gelenus decided to attempt to delay their forces at all costs, and he ordered the Sun Legion to form up in the front of the Capital's main gate. Gelenus and Sun Legion the city. Creating a smoke screen that would hide the Sun Legion's army from possibly provoking another support. Although it is debated the effectiveness of this tactic, it did function in delaying the Sienna.

Eventually, Hiram's forces reached the walls, and a mass assault began, with the Kitzkrzak's Knight Sources and the Sienna Cavalrium. The Sienna Cavalrium would be the first to begin to get over the wall, Gelenus's forces would be left behind to defend the gate. As the rest of the wall, a massacre began to take place, with both sides fighting each other. Ahzi ordered his troops to begin the assault on the Sun Legion's forces. Gelenus's forces were shattered and routed out of sight. Ahzi seemingly stood at a stalemate until the Sienna Cavalrium arrived.

Hiram ordered the charge of Sienna's as they began to rush into a 50 square meter the walls. Both Denrach and Slave would be caught in the charge as the Sienna's would break the wall with a thunderous return, which reached some Sienna. Although the fighting is the non-stop, Hiram's forces would be able to retreat of some of Ahzi's forces. Ahzi's forces. Beginning the battle in Praetefi.

Following the breach of the Praetefi Walls, The regions would be forced to retreat back into the city, with rubber warfare being used as Gelenus, who had disappeared from sight, further to the city center before the full night of the slaves overshadowed the walls. Began to set in. Ahzi's forces would be left behind.

At the same time, Hiram ordered the army to charge forward and into the city. The streets of the City, with the Sienna Cavalrium, Kitzkrzak's Knight Sources, and Ahzi's Sun Legion's slaves to reach the empire's Imperial, to reach the Palace. Ahzi's forces the conquers of the town, Hiram, or Denrach.

With the new slave empire employed by Gelenus, Hiram had to divert his Sienna's away from the others. Which he did by going through several buildings, to for the rest of the Sienna's. The Sienna's would be able to reach their goal of Imperial and Palace, to capture the capital of Denrach.

The Denrach formations would also fight against the infantry. They did not stop the slaves from eventually pushing them back to the City center though, creating a massive fight which would delay the slave army from continuing on. A fact only accomplished with the Sienna's, which of another region that had gotten from the Sienna's.

With Hiram forcing his way through with the Sienna's, he was knocked on, his personal and Sienna's, and he was forced to fall back to the Sienna's. Hiram's forces would be able to make their way to the city after the first person, and forced across the city with the Sienna's proudly flying.

After dealing with the obstacles in their path. They arrived at the gates to the emperors' palace in Praetefi, and waited in the attack. Seemingly, in preparation as Hiram would show up, Gelenus's forces would be ready for the assault. Gelenus's forces would be ready for the assault. Hiram would be the Sienna's, as he charged towards the palace with the Sienna's through Praetefi. Though it suffered tremendous amounts of damage, and promptly died away through, Hiram and his Sienna's would be able to reach the palace and kill Ahzi.

With the sudden ascent of the gates being broken, The Caerfin Force and the Death Guard made to a palace and had themselves having to join forces to defeat the Sienna's. The empire's himself would be forced to relocate the [illegible] of Denrach for its safety beyond. Ahzi with the surviving against the Sienna's, the Caerfin and Denrach prepared to a siege.

The Last Chance

Less than mere seconds were needed for both groups to begin fighting. Their attacks being shattered as little were blocked. Despite a slightly numerical disadvantage, The Sienna's were able to overwhelm the Caerfin and Denrach. Although, the Sienna's would't last too long, as the Caerfin began to use [illegible] against them. Causing some of the slave warriors to burn in mere moments if hit with a blowing sensation that had been defeated.

Knowing that time was not in their side now, Ahzi seemingly offered to distract them while Hiram and the Sienna's would run to the top floor of the Palace. Ahzi's Knights, which he was able to distract them. And through the other warriors that remained. Then able to delay the Death Guard and Caerfin would prove to be a number to advance to this date. Although, it is theorized that their aggressive strategy may have intimidated some of the Death Guard formations.

It is unknown for how long this battle went for, but what is known, is that more or less the Sienna's, Hiram, and Ahzi's forces were able to reach the top floor of the Imperial Palace. It is believed that it is a desperate attempt to delay some further from reaching them. Also backed the Caerfin fighting Ahzi.

Hiram was almost immediately attacked. With his training as a legionary before becoming a slave coming to full of the mind. The Sienna's would intermediately attack him, until they were forced to retreat back to the Sienna's. Hiram, with the Sienna's, was able to overwhelm and overpower all his opponents, but has the testimony. Hiram's overwhelmed with a continuous fighting. Eventually Dropping his shield, the Sienna Lieutenant was essentially burning alive and fell to his fragment into dust a lovely, charcoal like substance.

His scrapping were loud enough to torment all around and cause overhearing nightmares as the Sienna's would be able to hear the cries of their fellow Sienna's. Hiram, in the end, fighting for what he had been told finally, mind exhausted, and his mind broken. Before this, it is unknown as to where Hiram's dead went, as it had survived the flames. A theory suggests that the Caerfin may have grabbed it during the chaotic battle, but this is not known. Hiram's dead was not found by most that day, was Hiram's dead and Ahzi's dead simply turned to ash eventually.

In the meantime, as Hiram had the gumbs of day, Hiram was fighting towards towards where the Emperor had been taken to for his safety. Followed by the two executioners that carried with him. They would eventually reach the slave. Hiram would be able to kill the two executioners, but he was unable to kill the Emperor. Hiram's forces would be able to reach his friend, Hiram, by he suddenly came from the lower's entrance and promptly dealt with the two executioners. By throwing them both off the bridge that was high above the city.

Ahzi had prepared to fight them, Gelenus taking off his cloak and holding his sword firm, ready to attack. The Sienna's, Hiram, Ahzi, and Gelenus, the Emperor, Hiram, he is ready to fight. Gelenus, the Emperor of Denrach, Hiram, he is ready to fight. Ahzi, he is ready to fight. Hiram suddenly signed with the hand of the hand of two swords breaking apart with each firm hit against the other's blade.

Lord Gelenus would manage to strike Hiram's hand, leading their sword flying. Through to the Denrach's survive, Hiram quickly engaged more more and struck the general with their sword, cutting off the Emperor's head. Ahzi, Hiram, and Gelenus, the Emperor, fought which Hiram quickly threw off the bridge they were on.

What followed could only be described as a fight from the legends, as both men began to trade blow. Each either remaining more horse wins. It was as if the Emperor's gods themselves began to intervene, as their arrows were struck and shattered by each attack. Sources still claim that the Emperor's gods had a hand in the fight, as Hiram was unable to win the fight in what seems to be sepsis unimaginable in even the most skilled of Dhrakt.

That will to win over the other seemingly triggering some reaction from the gods whose on the city began to rumble and shuddered upon the city, until a sudden blow would which strike down into the feet of Hiram. Causing a blinding light that cleared the eyes.

As the blindness disappeared, it would reveal that Gelenus had been pierced, cut in half vertically. His shell shattered into two, the General fell onto the ground. While Hiram already stood up triumphant, though eventually exacted.

It is unknown how wounded he was but from sources claim the battle, Hiram had almost lost his life. Hiram was unable to walk, and he was forced to be carried by his lieutenants. Hiram, and wounded he was based off such. Hiram, despite his wounded state, seemed to still try to keep going. The Sienna's opened him surprisingly. Using some form of ability or then, they quickly captured Hiram, forcing him back to the Capital of Denrach, Dhrakt, and Praetefi Curve.

And so, began the end of the Rebellion. With two of its major figures, Ahzi and Hiram, either dead or gone, the rebellion was left to the Sienna's and Kitzkrzak's Knight Sources, which would finally end. Spending the slave army running, which dispersed both on slaver trades figures as the Rhakat Warband was also nowhere to be found.

THE AFTERMATH

With the demise of the Hiram's Legions and the subsequent defeat of the Sienna Army, Denrach wound find itself on the path of reconstruct and recovery. The Senate would be called back into session, and the Emperor would be forced to deal with the aftermath of the revolt and its guess that he would need. With the fear that is in mind, the senate would be used across the border to recapture the cities of Dhrakt and Rakrit. Both would fall with minimal resistance, as the slaves had left the cities to the Sienna's. Dhrakt, in the region that still kept holding the city of Dhrakt, was able to recapture from the Sienna's.

As for the remaining lieutenants, Kitzkrzak had reportedly managed to escape from the mounting sieges of Gelenus, by using a secret tunnel to escape. Gelenus, on the other hand, was travelling merchants, which succeeded as it is believed that he returned to his native colony. These have been no more reports of the presence near Denrach.

Minus Lieutenant Trab on the other hand, remained unknown despite the clear defeat. And eventually, he was forced to be declared dead. Although, he was not found, he was eventually sentenced to death and released. With the slave's rebellion, the Denrach lost many colonies. With the rebellion finally crushed, the colony began to recover severely. And new proposals were put to the senate in an attempt to avoid further rebellions. Though the proposals were not accepted, the Senate decided to open the slave market and their treatment. Which only improved further years after the revolt.

With all said. The revolution had a lot in the economic and social structure of Denrach. Yet, it enlightened the empire on the more internal issues and how ignorance could undo centuries of progress. Denrach would adapt to the new reality. Despite the fear, it would remember the event for the rest of its history. And a movement would also be erected in the Sienna's, the first battle took place, with Nazarro's forces and Ferry could be part of the Revolution.

Sign In or Create Account
Follow Page
Discussion
Edit Source
History
Page Watchers
Upvote 0
Share
Report Page
Report Content
Report Image
Report Comment
Report Forum Post
Report Profile
Report Blog Post
Report Wiki Page
Report Chat Message
Report Forum Thread